Communication in Teamwork and Leadership

During the course, you will learn and practice the various techniques needed for effective teamwork, persuasion, self-presentation, negotiation, bargaining, and public speaking in typical management situations. Primarily, you will learn about:

1. Teamwork: so you can communicate effectively, lead discussions positively, and delegate responsibilities appropriately.
2. Negotiating and bargaining: to help you to identify the negotiation and bargaining tactics; identify your partners' expectations; recognise the specific challenges of given situations – and then select the best solution available. You'll also be able to integrate both long-term and short-term goals into strategic decision-making. You'll also learn some principles of correct reasoning and some (verbal and nonverbal) symptoms of a lie.
3. Persuasion: a key element in a leader's arsenal is the power to persuade or motivate others to follow a particular path. This course explores both verbal and non-verbal persuasion techniques.
4. Public speaking and self-presentation: if you can present yourself well, you can show your work well. This course will give you the critical tools for self-presentation, negotiating, bargaining, and public speaking – and choose the style that best suits your talents and circumstances.
5. The ethics of communication: the course increases your awareness of the ethical dimensions of interpersonal communications – essential in a diverse, international work environment.
